

MANHATTAN

MARY NAYLOR

The life and work of Mary Naylor portrays a rare spectrum of talent and an uncanny ability to breathe joy into our chaotic routines. Her painting is a fresh and clear celebration of influences that rewards the viewer with a sense of nostalgia and familiarity. Mary's love for the outdoors and adventure has played a major role in her unique ability to recapture the wonderful effects of sunlight, shadow and bold color combinations in a wide variety of media and subjects.

During years spent in self-study while exploring Central America, the artist photographed and later painted large canvases in watercolor. She later switched to the more vibrant colors in acrylics, and in more recent years has explored ceramics and oils. Mary currently makes her home in the Columbia River Gorge in Washington, where she windsurfs, mountain bikes or jogs to start her day.
